Introduction of our NGO's:

1st joint trust for minorities(jtm)

A non-governmental organization (NGO) is a non-profit group that functions independently of any government NGOs, sometimes called civil societies, are organized on community, national and international levels to serve a social or political goal such as humanitarian causes or the environment.

JTM is a committee of men and young children and students who come from all walks of life with the motto of being the change they want to see in the society in terms of education and all. The biggest problem our country faces is the presence of too many people discussing issues but few trying to find solutions. Where we understand that finding loopholes are important, we believe every small action gets counted and it is important that we give away the complaints and try to do things for a brighter tomorrow.

If we want our democracy to work, it becomes extremely important that civil society is responsible and actively involved because when we get to choose the government, we become a part of it and as has been rightly said, with great power comes great responsibilities.

Our committee has moto to help every person and society. Work for only society development. Like food distribution, copies pencil pen or study material distribution for children, or many more things help for society development and encouragement of youth to do something for their nation.

NGO activities include, but are not limited to, environmental, social, advocacy and human rights works. They can work to promote social or political change on a broad scale or very locally. NGO play a critical part in developing society, improving communities, and promoting citizen participation.

JTM is a group of men, women, young children, and students and is a nongovernmental organization but funded by various government resources.

Most of its members are politically connected and it is under leadership of MR. Dalai Lama sir who has the main moto of making Tibet independent from the Chinese control.

They organized various camps in northern part of India and hundreds of events in a year. They have also operating various healthcare operation in northern part of India where they are treating the patient free of cost with the natural and non herbs collected from Tibet and various bud ministries.

They currently have their head office in Bihar PATNA and in every state they have a team of local leaders and other member who are working day and night to achieve aim one day.

Knowing the importance of values, they always maintained the balance between the modern scientific education and the spiritual values. When the person gets proper education, awareness is created among them, they started thinking and also the sense of questioning arose in them. This had led to the development of the economy as well. With education, employment increased in the society with which the income of the society also showed remarkable changes. CHALLENGES

Our project seems to be very effective in improving the life style of people in the time of need when each and every people want to help but unable due to some reasons

Our each and every decision help to save millions of life's as the website we make is used to tell people about the availability of beds, ventilators ,vaccines and many more and it will be very useful for the one that need a ventilator urgently .

We have get 1000nd of leads and we try to help all of them more over our NGO has done a great deal to avoid black hoarding they provide each and the oximeters at just rupees 249.One can order it just by sitting at their homes.

Secondly our food distributing mission help needy people because they are not able to get work at that time and was unable to arrange food for their food so our mission aims that no one should sleep hungry and we proved it by distributing the food to more than 5000 people in one month.

Our positivity spreading step was a great step toward eliminating anxiety and setting up a peaceful environment everywhere .people have appreciated us to do such a kind work.

CONCLUSION

Although this section on gender and NGOs in the management and sustainable use of the environment has been only exploratory, it is hoped that it will serve as a basis for further research into the gender and NGO issue, with special reference to women's access to critical resources such as training in farming systems, extension services, land, technology, credit, farming inputs and strategies for wood-fuel management to stem the environmental degradation NGOs and people's organizations, unburdened with large bureaucracies and noted for their flexibility and innovativeness, are often able to implement programs and activities more effectively.

NGOs are able to respond more quickly to grassroots needs, implement projects at a faster pace and gather feedback sooner than other types of development agencies. In most cases, NGOs are able to muster the necessary skills and expertise needed to carry out pilot programs and projects and to implement government programs for social service delivery.

In certain cases, such as in Bangladesh, the scale of operations of some NGOs has gone beyond pilot projects. With small or even non-existent bureaucratic structures, NGOs typically have far lower operating costs than government service delivery mechanisms. The JTM must be at the forefront of responding to the rapidly escalating humanitarian needs around the Jharkhand – saving lives and so much more, through this pandemic and beyond. And, as with any crisis, there's opportunity.

Opportunity here to design and develop new financing solutions, which could help to find new and better ways to tackle global challenges together.

This has never been more needed than now

The effectiveness of NGO interventions in the development process hinges, to a large extent, on whether or not the policy environment is conducive. Governments which actively welcome NGO involvement and participation in the development process provide a policy environment where NGOs are viewed as partners and not as competitors. NGO activities include, but are not limited to, environmental, social, advocacy and human rights work. They can work to promote social or political change on a broad scale or very locally. NGOs play a critical part in developing society, improving communities, and promoting citizen participation.
